Margret Hutchinson of Grant County, Kentucky discusses what it was like to grow up in the 70s and 80s while being a closeted lesbian. She recalls the difficulties of being closeted, the feelings accompanying lying about herself to those close to her, and the difference coming out has made on her live. She discusses coming out to her parents and family, how she was treated by them after coming out, and the relationships she currently holds with members of her family. The interview goes over her first relationships with men and women, her first kiss, and her stance on same sex marriage. She also discusses the part that Catholicism has played on her life and her identity. This interview was conducted as a part of an assignment for an oral history assignment (WGS 394-001, in the spring semester of 2018).
